In a world where art is all around us, it can be difficult to know what it truly means. Is it the Mona Lisa hanging in the Louvre, or is it the graffiti on the side of a building? Is it the symphony playing in the concert hall, or is it the sound of children laughing in the park?

For Badminton Kid, the protagonist of the novel Badminton Kid: What Is Art, these are questions that he grapples with on a daily basis. As a young artist, he is constantly being told what art is and what it should be. But he knows that there is more to art than just following the rules.

Badminton Kid sets out on a journey to find his own unique voice as an artist. He experiments with different mediums, subjects, and styles. He makes mistakes and he learns from them. And slowly but surely, he begins to develop his own unique perspective on art.
