Moving Home With Our Feet Under Water is a powerful and moving memoir that tells the story of author Jane Doe's family's journey from war-torn Syria to a new life in Canada. Weaving together personal anecdotes, vivid imagery, and historical context, Doe paints a compelling portrait of the resilience and hope that can be found even in the darkest of times.

Doe begins her story by recounting her childhood in Syria, a country she remembers as being "full of life and laughter." However, everything changed when the war broke out in 2011. Doe's family was forced to flee their home and embark on a perilous journey to safety.

Along the way, Doe and her family faced unimaginable hardships. They were detained in refugee camps, separated from loved ones, and subjected to violence and discrimination. But even in the face of such adversity, Doe never lost hope. She clung to the belief that one day she and her family would find a place where they could finally call home.

In 2015, Doe and her family were finally granted asylum in Canada. They arrived in a new country with nothing but the clothes on their backs, but they were determined to build a better future for themselves. Doe enrolled in school, learned English, and found a job. Her children are now thriving in their new home, and Doe is grateful for the opportunity to give them a life free from war and violence.

Moving Home With Our Feet Under Water is a story of resilience, hope, and the power of the human spirit. Doe's writing is both heartbreaking and inspiring, and her story is a testament to the strength of the human will. This is a book that will stay with you long after you finish reading it.
