Review

Saving Darfur: Everyone's Favorite African War is a must-read for anyone interested in understanding the complex humanitarian crisis in Darfur. Eric Reeves provides a comprehensive account of the conflict, from its origins to its devastating consequences. This book is an indispensable resource for anyone who wants to make a difference in the lives of the people of Darfur.

Reeves, a professor of English at Smith College, has been writing about the Darfur conflict since 2003. He has traveled to Darfur on numerous occasions and has met with survivors of the violence. His book is based on his firsthand observations, as well as on extensive research.

Reeves argues that the Darfur conflict is not simply a civil war, but rather a genocide. He documents the systematic killing of civilians, the burning of villages, and the rape of women and girls. He also describes the failure of the international community to intervene to stop the violence.

Saving Darfur is a powerful and moving book. Reeves's writing is clear and concise, and he does an excellent job of explaining the complex issues surrounding the Darfur conflict. This book is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the humanitarian crisis in Darfur and to make a difference in the lives of the people of Darfur.

About the Author

Eric Reeves is a professor of English at Smith College. He is the author of several books on the Darfur conflict, including:

- A Long Day's Dying: Critical Moments in the Darfur Genocide
- Compromising with Evil: An archival history of greater sudan, 2003-2009
- Sudan's Killing Fields: The Darfur Genocide

Reeves is a frequent contributor to The New York Times, The Washington Post, and other publications. He is also a member of the board of directors of the Enough Project, a non-profit organization that works to end genocide and crimes against humanity.
